About the Presenter

Ambreia Meadows-Fernandez is a journalist with work featured in national publications. She's an activist, and life-time learner. But above all else, she's a mother. Hope for her sons future is what keeps her going. After this talk, she hopes that participants will walk about with more knowledge on the following:

- Why Black Americans have a historical distrust of the healthcare system and it's auxiliaries.
- Tips to work towards acknowledging personal biases in daily procedures.
- Why cultural competency is essential, especially in healthcare.

HEW Talks are short, informative presentations organized to educate on health equity topics affecting people in the State of Wyoming.
